

A Fresh Look: Commercial Interior Design Projects

Author: Interior Design

• Wednesday, June 10th, 2009

Interior design is an artful industry that helps individuals and businesses to create a home or working environment that is beneficial to all concerned. These designers can help to take a home or office that is full of white walls and blank spaces and turn them into spaces that the individual or business owner can not wait to go to every day. In addition, a commercial interior design project can help businesses to retain clients, turning lobbies and waiting areas into a 'home away from home' for individuals, allowing them to relax while waiting for their appointments and enhancing their feeling of wellbeing in connection with that company.

Different Rooms, Different Looks

There are some offices that necessitate a clean, sterile working environment, such as a doctor's office. Even though the rooms must be able to be kept very clean and neat, this does not mean that the walls have to be white and bare of any artwork. A commercial interior design project in that situation can help to make these doctor's offices a place where a sick patient can relax, and their nerves can be calmed while waiting for the doctor to enter the room. That means that paintings can be hung on the walls, magazine racks can be readily available to the patient while they are sitting on the table, and the walls can be a soothing color promoting peacefulness, such as a blue or green.

Other commercial interior design projects may involve other types of spaces such as a lobby for a museum. In this type of space, the individual is not going to be spending a lot of time there, but it still is the first impression that they get of that particular place of business. As such, the commercial interior design project will want to make the individual feel welcome from the time he steps through the door, as well as 'leading' him to the next place that he needs to go, such as the ticket counter or help desk so that he does not feel overwhelmed or confused when entering. In addition, even though most individuals will not spend much time in that area, there is some waiting that has to be done there, such as individuals waiting on their rides to pull up to the front of the museum. The commercial interior design project will have to include some sort of seating arrangements throughout the lobby so that individuals who have to wait for a time can sit comfortably without blocking the way for the individuals entering the museum for the first time.

Category: Commercial Interior Design | Tags: Interior Design Projects | Leave a Comment

Creative and Cost Effective: Commercial Interior Design Firms

Author: Interior Design

• Wednesday, June 10th, 2009

Before starting a commercial interior design project, individuals should gain estimates from several different commercial interior design firms to see what they would charge for the desired amount of work. Individuals should also check with other business owners who have had interior design work done in their offices and see what companies did the work. In asking, the individual should find out how much work was done and to which rooms in the office, as well as the satisfaction of the business owner as to the quality of the work, the time it took to complete it, and the value for the cost of the project. This can help the business owner to compile a solid list of commercial interior design company that might be able to handle the project in a beautifully effective way.

Projects

Before contacting the commercial interior design firm, the individual should decide which rooms of the office will be considered in the project. He should also have a good idea of the budget that he wants to spend on the project so that he can take the estimates into consideration from the various companies. He should decide what types of things he wants done in the space, such as color changes, flooring, furniture and other décor so that he can explain his desires to the designer. If he does this preparatory work beforehand, it will give the commercial interior design firm a better idea beforehand what he expects and will expedite the process of writing the scope of the project and prospective plans to get the design work underway.

There are some commercial interior design firms that specialize in office spaces. These firms can help business owners to not only beautify the space, but can also help to arrange it to better meet the needs of the employees and clients. The designer will often ask what activities are done in a particular space as well as the feel that the business owner wants to portray in that space. In this way, the designer can help to create that working environment in that office space. Other commercial interior design firms will specialize in waiting areas or lobbies. They can help to create the initial feel that clients get when walking into an office, which is important in retaining clients. Other firms will specialize in bathroom spaces, helping to make them friendly and beautiful, as well as easy to maintain for the employees.